The Research Methods Graduate Certificate currently offers concentration areas in: a) Qualitative Research and b) Anti-Racist and Decolonizing Research. Coursework in both concentrations prepares researchers to conduct rigorous and meaningful research in higher education as well as research and policy organizations.

Concentration in Qualitative Research

The Qualitative Research 18-credit graduate certificate provides supplemental preparation for qualitative researchers in higher education and policy organizations. Coursework is interdisciplinary and will provide theoretical and applied research training across case study, ethnography, grounded theory, mixed methods, narrative inquiry, and participatory action research.

Concentration in Anti-Racist and Decolonizing Research

The Anti-Racist and Decolonizing Research (ARDR) 18-credit graduate certificate prepares researchers to conduct rigorous and meaningful research to advance racial justice, decolonization, and equity in society. The certificate has three components: 1) a foundation of three core courses introducing students to critical perspectives in research methods, 2) two electives of advanced applied methods courses including qualitative, quantitative, and mixed methods options, and 3) an applied capstone course.
